Evolving software development with Agentic DevOps

In the old world, software development was a long, slow relay. Today, ideas become prototypes in hours and reach production in days. Agentic DevOps will help you build faster, crush your backlog, cancel tech debt, secure your apps, and keep it all running in production.

You're at the centre of the orchestra, conducting agents, and approving recommendations, so you can get back to building epic stuff. This new era of software development, powered by agents, will be as transformative as the shift to the cloud. It removes friction, reduces complexity, and rewrites the cost structure that has held teams back for decades.

Microsoft 365 Copilot will soon provide AI-generated audio summaries for Word, PDFs and Teams meeting transcripts that are saved in OneDrive. Helping you to save time and listen to the overviews instead of reading through the whole document.

Microsoft 365

OneDrive: Export files as PDF

After this rollout, users can access the Export as PDF command in the three-dot menu or the command bar for files and shared libraries in OneDrive .

OneDrive: Prompt to Add Personal Account to OneDrive Sync

This feature prompts users who are signed into a personal Microsoft account on a Windows device and actively using their corporate OneDrive to also sign into OneDrive with their personal account.

Once signed in, users can access both their personal and corporate OneDrive accounts on the same device—without merging content. The prompt is enabled by default and only appears if a personal account is already in use on the device.

Organisations that have previously restricted personal account usage with the DisablePersonalSync policy will not see the prompt. Administrators can also suppress it using the DisableNewAccountDetection policy.
